- 1) Petrobras carries out relationship activities with public authorities, through its CEO, executive directors and employees formally designated as spokespersons for the company and professionals belonging to organizational units with attributions and authorizations to relate and represent the company before this group of stakeholders. Petrobras does not hire companies and consultants to carry out this activity on its behalf.
- 2) According to our Code of Ethical Conduct, "Petrobras also assumes the duty to refuse support and contributions to political parties or political campaigns of candidates for elective offices". It is also publicly expressed in Petrobras' Sustainability Report.
- 3) Data refer to Petróleo Brasileiro SA (holding). Main associations are listed in Petrobras Sustainability Report according to Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) methodology. Petrobras does not utilize companies to carry out influence activities on its behalf. Although the company's advocacy may occur via national and international sectoral associations related to the oil and gas industry chain, Petrobras' participation in external entities is not intended uniquely to influence public policy decisions. Among the amounts paid, it is not possible to indicate which portion was intended for influence activity. By participating in these associations, Petrobras also seeks to maintain technical exchanges, access new technologies, contribute to Petrobras' research and development projects or other interests of the company. The list of the most relevant external entities in which Petrobras participates and the respective associative values are published annually in the Sustainability Report and can also be verified on Petrobras' Investor's webpage.
- 4) Petróleo Brasileiro SA sales revenue is used as the denominator for data coverage. The following values are publicly available in Financial Statements.
